DIRECTOR'S MESSAGE

Gary Harter, Executive Director

Utah Department of Veterans & Military Affairs

Hope all is going well as we head into the Summer! And as seasons go by, so do changes. As you are probably aware, there have been tremendous changes with veterans healthcare as the VA rolled out the MISSION Act this past month. These changes provide some unique opportunities that were not available before. Please ensure that you read the VA article contained in this magazine, go online at www.va.gov or talk to someone at the VA to understand how these benefits will best impact you. We've also had changes with several of the commanders of our veterans organizations as they all recently held their annual state-wide conferences. We want to say thank you to the former commanders for your great work and we look forward to engaging with the new commanders in accomplishing your vision. And several of our senior military commanders have recently changed or will do so shortly to include the commanders of the 76th Medical Command (Fort Douglas), 388th Fighter Wing (Hill Air Force Base), Ogden Air Logistics Complex (Hill Air Force Base) and U.S. Army Dugway Proving Ground. We wish them all the best for their great work for our country.

Since our last issue we have held a number of great events recognizing women veterans, honoring Vietnam Veterans, conducting the fifth annual Veterans Business Summit, participating in the Armed Forces Day Concert at the Gallivan Center, the renaming of the Northern Veterans Center to the Major Brent Taylor Veterans Center, the Army Ball and many other events across the state.

We are working hard to achieve our vision of being able to submit claims using a remote environment, which we call tele-claims, whereby a veteran, right at home, can engage with one of our VSOs through a portal, right to our desk. We believe that this will assist veterans throughout the state to submit claims no matter where they live nor if they are able to come to one of our locations. We have piloted it and are focused on making it available in a broader sense in the near future.

As I go across the state and engage with military members, veterans and their families, and those who support them, it is truly amazing the patriotism that Utah's display every day. From all corners of our state, urban and rural, and every place in between, it is quite evident that Utah is a special place, and we in the department are honored to engage with you. If we can assist in any way, please connect with us and let us.

We wish you all the best this Summer, Gary 🇺🇸

Utah Veteran Military and Family Member Survey

The State of Utah Department of Veterans & Military Affairs has released a new survey in Utah for veterans, military, and family members of those serving or who have served. To that end, we designed a survey that should help us ensure that the right services are available at the right time for the right need and the Department encourages everyone to see the QR Code and link below for the Survey. This comprehensive survey addresses benefits and needs in a variety of areas including healthcare, disability compensation, education, employment, homelessness, and more. Additional demographic information will assist to better understand and prioritize veterans issues related to location, age, service era, and other criteria.

This survey is being distributed via multiple methods in order to better reach all of our active duty military and veterans, as well as their family members, throughout the state. We hope you will take several minutes of your valuable time to fill out this survey, so that we may better understand and address the needs of our community moving forward. 🇺🇸

Navy Vet Continues to Serve with the Help of Workforce Services

Sara lived by the adage, "It is more blessed to give than receive," which led her to join the U.S. Navy in 2007. Sara was assigned to the USS Carl Vinson as an Electrician Mate until she was honorably discharged in 2012. Sara planned to make the Navy a career; her family was so proud of her for fulfilling a lifelong dream. Unfortunately, she was reassigned to a limited duty command at Norfolk Naval Shipyard until her discharge. Following a damaging incident, she felt mentally broken and was diagnosed with PTSD. She also struggled with making ends meet to support herself and her daughter. They moved in with her parents until she could get back on her feet.

A veteran she met at the VA Medical Center told her about the Utah Department of Workforce Services. She came into the Midvale employment center, and staff referred her to Disabled Veteran Outreach Program specialist (DVOP) Jeffery Henry who quickly put her at ease while they talked about their military experiences. Jeff made Sara feel like a priority and gave her hope when she learned that she could translate her military experience to find a job with the federal government. After he assisted her with building a resume for federal jobs, Sara began applying at the VA while continuing to work with Jeff on her resume for the private sector.

Jeff referred Sara to a Work Success Program coach who helped her with her interviewing techniques. With the assistance she received from Workforce Services, Sara interviewed and got a job at Merit Medical, a biotechnology firm. However, before she could start that job, she was offered two different positions at the VA. She accepted a GS-7 with benefits. Sarah is extremely grateful for the opportunity to once again serve as a government civil servant while being able to care for herself and her daughter. 🇺🇸

Women's Veterans Celebration

Earlier in the year on March 22, 2019 a program was held during Women's History Month. While there are many different avenues of celebrating the impact that women have had on United States history, we took this opportunity to highlight and celebrate Utah's Women Veterans hosted at the State Capitol Rotunda in Salt Lake City.

The theme this year was "Sisters in Service". Our welcoming speaker Senator Escamilla began the celebration with kind words on how women Veterans have influenced her both in a personal and professional way. Highlights of the evening included keynote speaker Denise Rohan who is the first female National Commander for the American Legion. The Women Veterans in attendance also had the pleasure of listening to Colonel Gina "Torch" Sabric - Commander of the 419th Fighter Wing, and the first female F35 pilot in the Air Force Reserves.

It was a great time for all women Veterans to come together to reminisce and share memories of their service and the State of Utah along with partners to honor their service. We look forward to 2020 and the next ceremony in March to meet and come together again. Stay tuned and more information to come as the planning committee meets to get and plan for 2020. 🇺🇸

Camp Williams - UTNG

Utah's HRF trains for the worst

By Sgt. Tim Berry

CAMP WILLIAMS, Utah— On a normal weekend, the sight of men and women donning full chemical suits and driving rescue vehicles may seem alarming. To the soldiers in the Utah National Guard Homeland Response Force it's any given Saturday. With around 580 soldiers in its ranks, the HRF is designed to respond to landscape altering events such as chemical, biological, radiological, nuclear and explosive (CBRNE) attacks, in addition to natural disasters such as earthquakes or wildfires. Ultimately these men and women are in the business of saving lives.

"My emphasis is we've just got to be prepared," said Col. Steven Brenchley, the HRF commanding officer. "We are training to be prepared for that response. We are one of 10 units in the country with this capability and if something were to happen on the west coast—we would be the ones to respond."

On this weekend, around 270 HRF troops gathered at Camp Williams to complete an annual external evaluation. This year the training focused on the fallout from a 10-kiloton nuclear explosion. Soldiers searched rubble piles for victims and took the necessary steps to decontaminate nuclear particles from their bodies and then provided medical assistance.

"It's important to get (training) down to the smallest details," said Col. Ryan Robinson, deputy commanding officer of the exercise. "We're dealing with human lives—saving lives. We have to mitigate suffering."

Those human lives were portrayed by real people. Actors from the Salt Lake City area took part in the training and even dressed in full triage. The actors gave the soldiers a run for their money with a malady of ailments ranging from illness to complete dismemberment and even (notional) death.

"We received a mass email that went out to everyone in EMT Utah," said Nicholas Carico, a Utah Valley University student and emergency medical technician trainee, and one of the simulated injured role players. "We get the experience here of seeing how to handle a mass casualty, and that helps us know how to act—both here in this exercise and on the other side when we are the responders."

"They're taking it really seriously, and it's cool to watch," added Mallory Langford a University of Utah medical student from Salt Lake City who got the honor of playing an amputee trapped in a fallen structure. "We are given our injuries and ailments ahead of time," she added. "And we play the role and keep in character."

Having actors in the triage role adds the element of human emotion to the training and creates real scenarios, such as patients not immediately complying with instruction. Soldiers learn coping skills and how to de-escalate situations. Human emotion adds a degree of reality simply not found using training dummies and aids.

HRF Soldiers train in situations like these so they can be ready to deploy rapidly to areas of need. Designed to deploy within 6-12 hours, soldiers spend the year honing their techniques and then test their capabilities at external evaluations such as this one. They train in simulated situations so they can respond and react to real situations.

"Last fall we (HRF) were involved in responding to the devastating burns in Utah County," said Brenchley. "There were worries about flooding after the fires. We deployed and did some flood mitigation. We're a great asset because we already do this stuff. County emergency managers put up the request to the state, and the Governor activates the National Guard and we can go out and respond. We have the manpower to help, and we have the vehicles and equipment to support requests both locally and distant."

While a 10-kiloton nuclear blast creates a bold headline, HRF soldiers also train for the more likely events to occur in the Intermountain West, such as earthquakes, flooding, wildfires and significant weather events.

"We do train for those more likely events, such as storms and earthquakes," said Brenchley. "But we always prepare for the bigger and more devastating events such as a CBRNE disaster. That's really why we're here. Saving lives and helping those in need."

The training involved drills on responding to a 10-kiloton nuclear blast and included rescue, extraction, decontamination and medical attention. 🇺🇸

Vet Center Mindful Meditation Group

Meditation conjures up images of solitary individuals, but Salt Lake Vet Center's Mindful Meditation Group is changing that.

"As soldiers, as Veterans, we are used to being part of a team," said Richard Hooper, Vet Center Readjustment Counselor, Army Veteran, and the group's facilitator. "Being together we learn. I bring what I know, everyone brings what they know, and we are all better off."

Richard sees three types of Veterans come to the group. A Veteran that already practices or has practiced mindfulness and meditation. A Veteran that's aware of mindful meditation, and is interested in the practice. The Veteran who usually knows little to nothing about the practice or already has preconceived notions about it, but is willing to give it a try.

Major Janine Smith, Utah Air National Guard, is one of the regular participants in the group. She falls into Richard's first group.

"I meditate by myself every day," Janine said after a recent group meeting, "but when you do it with a group, it's just more powerful."

US Marine Corps Vietnam Veteran Dean Crawford falls into the last group. He was invited to the group by a long-time friend and fellow Veteran.

"I never really even thought about it before then," said Dean. "I came and I really enjoyed it."

No matter their level of knowledge—many Veterans hope the group helps them deal better with some of life's obstacles. Stress, anxiety, anger, and sleep problems—research shows that mindful meditation can help with all those issues.

"Nothing about our culture says, 'oh stop and be mindful,'" said Janine. "It's just so loud, and meditation is a place where you can just calm all that down."

Richard Hooper, Vet Center Readjustment

Counselor, leads the mindful meditation group. The group helps “calm all that down.” Their weekly catch-up helps group members get to know each other a little better and discuss how they’ve used mindfulness in their daily lives. Members can share as little or as much as they would like. Richard then walks them through a mindful meditation exercise. There’s a definite camaraderie among the group and they feel like a team tackling life’s challenges.

“It’s far surpassed anything that I could have come up with myself,” said Janine. “Just to know that every week I can come back. If I have a problem, I can run it past these people and they can assist me to get to the next level. “

“I really love it,” said Dean. “I don’t know exactly how it works. I don’t know all the ins and outs of it, but all I know is it just makes me feel so much calmer. And before I used to get all keyed up inside and I don’t do that anymore. “

As for Richard, he loves to see the differences in Veterans who attend the group and practice mindful meditation. “It’s really fun to see them transition from kind of being out of control to realizing they have a lot of control.”

The Mindful Meditation group meets at 1 p.m. every Thursday at the Salt Lake Vet Center and is open to any Veteran eligible for Vet Center services. The Vet Center is located at 22 West Fireclay Avenue in Murray. For more information contact the Salt Lake Vet Center at 801-266-1499. 🇺🇸
